Gloucester Apprentices During the Eighteenth Century

Alphabetical by Name of Child Apprenticed, Siblings Clumped Together

The purpose of this investigation is to see how the town fathers of Gloucester handled the unprecedented number of orphans of men killed in the conflict of the American Revolution–by land or by sea. The source is the compilation by the Gloucester [Mass.] Archives Committee, Children Bound Out as Indentured Apprentices By the Overseers of the Poor, 1739-1852. The original work on this was done by John C. Reilly; a fuller version was compiled by Stephanie Buck. Reilly's Deaths Not Recorded in Printed Vital Records, 1739-1852 (Gloucester, Mass. Archives Committee, n.d., was also used. All families of the apprentices were checked against the listing of Gloucester Warnings Out, and, where individuals could not be identified in the Gloucester records, against the conflated vital records of many Massachusetts towns, available on the website, Newenglandancestors.org, of the New England Historic Genealogical Society.

For Revolutionary service, see McCarl, Cape Ann During the American Revolution. (2007).

Apprenticeships noted are from those undertaken during the forty-three years before the Revolution–1731 through 1774, compared to those children who were born between 1775 and 1783. They were traced in the compiled Vital Records of the Town of Gloucester. The apprentices were checked for births, marriages and deaths. The apprentice's parents were checked for their marriage and the death of the father and possible re-marriage of the mother.
The fathers of the children were "deceased" only if the source says so specifically. "Late" is ambiguous. There are a few private records that clearly list the father as dead–for example, Babson cites Ebenezer Pool to show that David Tarr's father David was drowned coming in from fishing in 1759 or 1760–but in the absence of "deceased" this has been taken to mean that they were previous residents of the town of Gloucester, and left the child–and often the mother–behind. "Poor of the town" were children whose parents may have been living, but who had no family or financial resources to depend on to place them in apprenticeship, so the selectmen did it for them. They were often placed at an early age with the rich and important men, who brought them up as general servants until they were old enough for formal training.

The masters were checked for marriages, and if they shared a surname with a parent of the child apprenticed to them, births and deaths as well.

Date End: Apprenticeships ended at age 21 for males and age 18 for females.
* or  or : Siblings
D: deceased, L: Late, in reference to father: Po: "Poor of the town" in reference to apprentice or father.
